Eberle Quits As U.S. Trade Negotiator

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25 (WP). -President Ford accepted with deep "regret" yesterday the resignation of his top trade negotistor, William Eberle.

Mr. Eberle submitted his resignation last week and was asked to reconsider. But, as an exchange of letters released in Vall. Colo., showed yesterday, he nevertheless decided to leave the administration.

Ethiopia Increases Security In Asmara After 7 Murders

ADDIS ABABA, Dec. 25 (Reuters). - Soldiers with machine guns patrolled the main streets of Asmara today as security pre-cautions were tightened in the violence-wracked Eritrean provincial capital.

Military checkpoints around Asmara were strengthened as Ethiopian troops and Eritrean rebels continued to clash. There was no official word on the death toll. Usually reliable sources here said at least five Ethiopian sol-

Proposed Pay Increase Puts British MPs in Ticklish Spot

LONDON, Dec. 25 (NYT) .-Members of the House of Commons, who are among the lowestpaid legislators in Western democracies, are about to be asked to vote themselves a raise. The trouble is that many of them are too embarrassed to approve it.

the last th salaries have remained the same -about £4,730 ($11,000) a year, as compared, for example, with $42,500 for American senators and representatives. Now Prime Minister Harold Wilson's government has come to the conclusion that they should get more because of "serious financial strains." special study has been ordered.

A British member earns less than many of the legislators on the Continent. For example, a deputy to the French National Assembly earns about 139,575 francs ($29,000) a year, and a Bundestag deputy in West Germany about 46,550 marks ($19,000). The allowances for a staff are also more generous in many other countries.

Embarrassed Members

In normal times, the idea of a pay increase for Parliament might not have created much of a stir. But, given the country's economic plight and the national effort to persuade others to restrain wage demands, members are reacting with a mixture of relief and embarrassment mostly embarrassment. One member has offered a motion suggesting that salaries be cut by 10 per cent to set an example. Others are saying they are willing to forgo any raises right now. But some have dropped all inhibitions and argued that they really did need more. The British traditionally have taken the view that a member of the 635-seat House of Commons should not be paid too much—something less than would be needed to live luxuriously but enough to keep him afloat. Since the last salary increase, in January, 1972, retail prices have jumped 36 per cent and just about everyone else's wages have ina member of Parliament works only part time, leaving him with enough time for other jobs.

John Stonehouse, the member who caused a sensation by turning up Monday night in Australia after disappearing for more than a month, is an example of a legislator who devoted much of his time to his business interest. Following his arrest for using a false passport, he explained yesterday that he wanted to build a new life to escape from the "incredible pressures" of his wideranging-and failing-business af-

Over the years, the demands of parliamentary work have increased on members who are faced with longer sessions and more requests for help from the voters back home. And the conscientious in the House are finding less time to earn money on the side.

"I would say most members work hard at duties in the House," a Labor whip said. "But about 25 per cent of them don't take it all that seriously and spend much of their time away from the House, either at their homes outside of London or at other jobs.

Little for Expenses

Americans who have watched Congress are often surprised not only at the relatively low salaries for members here but also at the conditions in which they work and the lack of funds available for secretaries and research asstants. Members often share offices with colleagues, dictate letters to part-time secretaries in corridors and write their own speeches.

One of the newcomers to the House, for example, is Roderick MacFarquhar, elected as a freshman Labor member in February. Like other members, he gets only f1,300 a year for a personal staff, enough to give him a secretary 3 1/2 days a week.

Burma Tense, Quiet Under Martial Law

After Riots Directed At Ne Win Regime

By Bernard Weinraub

RANGOON, Burma, Dec. 25 (NYT).—By dusk, Rangoon is a silent capital. Birds swirl around the golden-roofed pagodas and mongrels howl, but the streets are empty and early quiet.

A curiew starts every day at 10 p.m. and ends at 4 p.m. "Everyone is scared," a Chinese ousinessman said. "The tension is here." an Asian diplomat commented, "and it will remain. Something will happenin one year, two years, whenever. It can't go on like this." A Burmese, sitting in his home, said: "Three years ago no one would have dared to protest or talk against the government. Now everyone is resentiul and grumbling among themselves. Prices have doubled in the last year. The only way to survive is to buy and sell on the black market. People are bitter."

Student Riots

Early this month, the government of President Ne Win unposed martial law and a curiew in Rangoon after student riots. The demonstrators were protesting the government's failure to pay homage to U Thant and grant what they considered a fitting burial spot to the former UN secretary-general. the plane, carrying 151 passengers

Mr. Thant, who died of cancer Nov. 25 in New York, was a political ally of U Nu, the exiled former premier, who was ousted by the current regime.

The issue of Mr. Thant's burial turned into a fierce protest by students and Buddhist monks against the regime of Mr. Ne Win, unemployment among college graduates, the lack of free speech, the 100-per-cent increase in consumer prices during the last two years, corruption among civil servants and the black market in almost everything.

According to an official account, nine persons were killed and 74 wounded in the riots, which were crushed by security forces. Unofficial estimates range as high as 50 to 70 dead. As many as 3,000 students and monks are believed to be in jail.

'Way to Socialism'

Mr. Ne Win has been in power more than 12 years—longer than any other head of state in Southeast Asia. He has sought to shape his own "Burmese way to socialism," resulting in the virtually complete nationalization of industry and business above the level of sidewalk stands.

The economy is the verge of collapse, partly because farmers have found it unprofitable to sell rice to the government at the low incentives offered. Furthermore, industries have been placed in the hands of army

colonels and production, formerly in the hands of Indian and Chinese businessmen, is crippled.
At this point, the President, 63, seems firmly in control, largely because his carefully selected military chiefs are loval to the government, Soldiers with automatic weapons are seen almost everywhere—on streets, in front of banks, at government offices 250 Released

Israeli troops today relaxed their guard over this town, where a sparser-than-usual Christmas pilgrimage crowd went unmolested by Arab guerrillas who had warned them to stay away.

A total of 4,000 visitors reached St. Catherine's Church, part of the Church of the Nativity complex, and Manger Square, where they watched a telecast of the midnight mass at the Vatican. Only a few hundred stragglers remained today for morning mass, guarded by bored Israeli paratroopers in full combat gear.

No incidents were reported during the 36 hours of Bethlehem ceremonies, but 1.200 teen-age visitors from Britain and Germany, who arrived at Haifa port aboard two ships, planned to leave after a single day's stopover in response to the guerrilla threat, sources in Nazareth said.

Prompted by a Palestinian warning that tourists were vulnerable to attack so long as Israel controlled the West Bank of Jordan, security forces subjected worshipers entering the church to body searches for the first time in the strictest surveillence since the 1967 Middle East war.

"It doesn't seem much like Christmas with all the soldiers and the guns pointed at you,' said Kathy Stapleton, 19, a student from East Lansing, Mich. "Not that it bothers me. I realize they have to take these precautions," she said. "The bus" "ss was not bad this year," said George Freij, a souvenir shop owner, whose brother is mayor of this half-Christian, half-Moslem town in the occupied West Bank of Jordan. "You know, last year, Christwar and that hurt everything around here. This year it's better," he added. As the bells of St. Catherine's pealed for the start of morning high mass a muezzin sounded his call to worship from the minaret of the Mosque of Orear on the other side of Manger Square. For the first time in 34 years, the Moslem Feart of the Sacrifice

London Is Uneasy but Defiant Over Series of IRA Bombings

By Alvin Shuster

LONDON, Dec. 25 (NYT),-Londoners are reacting to the recent spate of bombs with a mixture of unease and defiance. It is not a city gripped in fear. Indeed, given the spontaneous singing in many pubs over holi-day drinks and the throngs of shoppers walking past damaged shops on Oxford Street, the bombings would appear on the surface to have made little impact. [The IRA declared an 11-day cease-fire effective at midnight Sunday. So far, the IRA has observed its truce and the bombings have stopped.] But there is a growing sense of concern over the random nature of the bombings, which have gone off in pubs, stores, automobiles and mail boxes. They have had an effect on the daily life of many. "I try to look for suspicious

Cyclone Tears Into Darwin; About 50 Dead 20,000 Are Homeless In Australian City

CANBERRA, Dec. 25 (Reuters). -A tour-hour cyclone devastated Australia's northern port city of Darwin-early today, leaving about 50 persons dead and half of its population of 40,000 homeless.

Hundreds of persons were injured when the first winds of 125 miles an hour hit the town. Hundreds of homes were leveled. roofs were ripped off the main hospital and many other buildings. Ships ran aground or were sunk, cars were overturned and power lines were blown down. Many of the dead were motorists driving home from Christmas Eve parties. The city was left without electricity or drinking water. The National Disaster Organization said 44 persons were already listed as dead.

Trapped Bodies Some of the dead were found trapped in their cars by pieces of metal roofing or timbers. A pilot who flew over Darwin said later that the area near the airport was the worst hit. He described the city as a scene of devastation.

The harbor area was also badly hit, with many vessels sunk or aground. Acting Prime Minister Jim Cairns said in a statement here: "It's a national disaster." Reports from Darwin were still scant, but Philip Cairns, Mr. Cairns's son and private secretary, said the death count was 50. Communications with the outside world had been cut off for several hours but messages were now being received here. The navy has canceled shore leave for sailors in Sydney and is assembling a task force to sail north relief teams and supplies. Air force planes began delivering medical supplies, food and clothing as soon as Darwin airport reopened.

Shipping casualties in the har-bor included two navy patrol boats-one ran aground and the other was reported to have sunk after its magazine blew up when it collided with a wharf. Two freighters were also reported

Panama's strongman, Brig. Gen. Omar Torrijos, has frequently and publicly demanded the progressive elimination of the U.S. military presence in the zone. About 12,000 troops, largely U.S. Army and Air Force personnel, are stationed here. ..

On the Panamanian side, there is "a reluctance to commit a future. generation" and Panama, there-fore, wants an option, rather than a commitment, to renew the military articles in the treaty.

Ford Said to Have Impressed World Leaders During Talks

By Craig R. Whitney

BONN, Dec. 25 (NYT).-The foreign leaders who have met with President Ford in recent months say they have been impressed with his honesty, his personal warmth and his grasp of the issues.

A survey by New York Times correspondents in West Germany, Canada, Israel, Japan, the Soviet Union and France shows that the impression Mr. Ford left with the men who lead these nations is generally more favorable than the one reflected in the press.

All of them recognize that they will be dealing with him for at least the next two years and possibly longer, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany, according to his press aide, Klaus Bolling, thinks the President will grow into his new responsibilities. While this stops short of saying that Mr. Ford bowled over the German leader with a display of expertise in Washington on Dec. 5 and 6, other leaders apparently made similarly favorable sments. Most of them are between the new President and his foreign counterparts is tempered somewhat by the fact that only with Mr. Brezhnev and with the French President, Valery Giscard d'Estaing, did Mr. Ford have much serious negotiating to do. The other visits were mainly to get acquainted.

When there were differences with the Russians on the complex problems of the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks and with the French on an internatic_al energy policy—the foreign leaders regarded Secretary of State Henry Kissinger as the expert. A Soviet journalist who was at Vladivostok said afterward: "It was successful but Ford didn't quite understand it. It was Brezhnev talking with Kissinger." Like all foreign leaders, Mr. Brezhnev probably took Mr. Ford very seriously because of his posi-tion. And the President, according to American sources Moscow, made it very clear that he would be running in 1976.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 25 (WP) .--More than 100,000 tons of packaged food appears destined to speil in failout shelters around the United States in the next few

If this happens it will not be because the U.S. government still adheres to a policy of keeping fallout shelters amply stocked with food as a precaution against nuclear attack. That policy was abandoned in the late 1960s. High-nutrient biscuits and candied carbohydrate supplements had been stockpiled in shelters mostly between 1962 and 1964.

These foodstuffs, which are tinned, boxed, cartoned and crat-ed-ready to ship and ready to eat—have greatly exceeded then originally anticipated shelf-life of five years. The time is running out on when they are fit for human consumption.

Already 1,500 tons of the food have spoiled, according to the U.S. Defense Civil Preparedness Agency. Nutritional experts at the CARE relief organization pre-dict that the remainder will be good for only two to four more

Food Donated

With the cooperation of Civil Preparedness, since 1970 scores of communities—the owners of the food in their local fallout shelters have donated food from their stocks through relief agencies to areas of the world faced with natural catastrophes and widespread starvation.

"We'd sure rather see Deonle eat this than have it fed to hogs. that's for certain." said James Burns, director of the Financial and Material Assistance Division of the agency.

But the dent that voluntary efforts have made on the total stockpile has been small, according to agency records.
Only 13,500 tons—or 8 per cent of the total stockpile of 165,000 tons—have been distributed, these records show. The remaining 150,000 tons of still-edible food could feed 10 million people for 60 days, according to government

At the present rates of distribution and anticipated spoilage, this means that 136,500 tons of now edible and nutritious foodstuffs may be wasted in the next four years or so.
"Some people don't want to give up their stocks. They say, What the hell happens when a blg boom comes?" one Civil Preparedness official said. But that fear seems to have faded in most places. Some pres-sure for giving up the stocks has actually come from department stores wanting to free basement storage space for other purposes By far the biggest donations have come from New York City, which would also presumably be a prime target in the kind of allout nuclear war which was envisioned when the food was

The big problem in getting the food out has been money, coupled with logistics and a lack of awareness that these small mountains of food are desperately needed, experts agreed. Some problems are illustrated by the case of Hannibal, Mo., near St. Louis. There the City Council recently voted to give its entire stock of 10 tons from 16 if any, their return to politics fallout shelters to hungry people anywhere in the world. The town was uncertain whether it actually owned the food and could give it away until the office of a Missouri senator investigated the matter. Then the city fathers wondered where the food should go to do the most good and how it could be shipped The manager of the Chamber of Commerce in Hannibal was astounded to learn from a reporter that a mechanism already existed for donations of the food. 'I thought, literally, that almost

It has become obvious that Russia is ahead of us in nuclear arms."

Cubans Are Suspected In 26 Explosions

MIAMI, Dec. 25 (NYT).-A wave of terrorism here, attributed to unidentified Cuban refugees, is causing deep concern in the local community and at the State Department.

Twenty-six bombs have exploded here since May 13, when a bomb destroyed an office of Re-plica, a Spanish-language national weekly news magazine.

The latest explosions occurred on Dec. 14 and Dec. 16 outside the offices of two cruise lines that go to the Bahamas, Inves-tigators think that the explosions could have been politically motivated because the Bahamas have recently established relawith the government of Premier Fidel Castro of Cuba.

"Until the most recent explosions ther has been little excitement in the Anglo community about the bombings," Max Lesnik, editor of Replica, said, "As long as bombs have exploded in the Cuban districts, these acts were regarded as a normal occurrence in the Latin Barrio, But now that American interests have been affected, more security measures are promised and maybe at long last ther; will be some ar-

No Casualties

There have been no casualties in the bombings and only limited material damage.

The Replica bombing, which was followed by telephone calls attempting to extert money, "has been practically ignored by both the local and federal law enforcement agencies," Mr. Lesnik

Bombings that could be politically motivated are said to be investigated by the State Department. Several officials are expected to arrive here next month to meet with local law enforcement officers and members of the Cuban refugee community.

A police investigation, which according to some local officials has been less than vigorous, has falled to uncover any clues as to the perpetrators of the bombings, who are believed to number less than two dozen.

In anonymous calls to local newspapers, persons who say they placed the bombs described themselves as members of a clandestine group called the Latin-American Anti-Communist Ar-

Unguarded Intelligence

Yet another conspiracy under the Nixon administration to defy the law and infringe upon the constitutional rights of American citizens has now sprung into the open. The domestic intelligence-gathering operation of the Central Intelligence Agency, the maintenance of secret files on several thousand American citizens suspected of political dissidence were flatly illegal activities: There is no alternative now to invoking appropriate legal procedures against the officials responsible.

The basic rationale for the CIA as an independent intelligence organization is not at issue: it is unfortunate that a valuable, even essential, institution has been cast under a cloud by the misguided zeal of those inside and outside the agency who thought nothing of twisting and misusing an important national asset

It is reassuring to hear from President Ford and the present director of Central Intelligence, William E. Colby, that all such domestic surveillance activities have been terminated: more to the point is how they could have been permitted in the first place when federal statutes so clearly bar the CIA from internal security functions.

In defending the CIA against criticism arising from unwise but not illegal covert activities abroad, Mr. Colby has persuasively argued that the agency was simply carrying cut the duly issued policy directives of the National Security Council. It will be important now to learn whether this domestic surveillance program—unwise and illegal—was also initiated by the NSC or the Nixon White House or, alternatively, grew up from the independent unchecked initiative of the agency's own counterintelligence department, most secret and impenetrable branch of a sheltered bureaucracy.

Defenders of the intelligence community argue that domestic surveillance is permissible when clearly related to foreign intelligence purposes. A more concrete attempt at justification arises from the decision in 1970 of J. Edgar Hoover, late director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, to cut off working relations with the CIA. Since the agency could no longer rely on the FBI, the body legally charged with internal security, it was pushed into its own domestic surveillance, so the argument goes. Professional rivalries are endemic among secret services, but this particular feud, stretching back even to the predecessor organization of the CIA, has had deplorable implications for national security.

This illegal surveillance operation and the failure to institute legal proceedings until after its public disclosure suggest an intolerable breakdown of institutional checks and balances. For many years The New York Times—among others—has urged closer oversight by Congress of the intelligence community. But the first responsibility for preventing any further misuse of power must rest with the CIA and other elements of the intelligence community, if they wish to continue receiving the trust absolutely required for the conduct of their mission.

Concessions on Berlin

The package of concessions on Berlin offered by East Germany in exchange for a five-year extension of traditional trade credits from West Germany represents a breakthrough of major importance. It is further evidence, already reflected in Bonn's negotiations with the Soviet Union, that Chancellor Schmidt's insistence on linking the problems of Berlin to negotiations on trade and technology with Communist countries is paying off.

The most heated point of contention that has been liquidated was the East German currency-exchange fee imposed on West Berlin pensioners visiting relatives in East Berlin and East Germany, an important emotional and political issue in West Berlin and West Germany. Now this Issue has been resolved and the discriminatory ban against West Berliners driving to the East by car a so is to be removed.

is to be improved as well. The East Germans have agreed to build a new superhighway between Hamburg and Berlin, to speed rail crossings. Bonn will have to finance most of the costs of construction, which will benefit the East German economy, but it is a price worth paying. Other East German concessions include offers to provide electric power to West Berlin, to buy West Berlin manufactured products, and to sign a 20-year contract for disposal of West Berlin's sewage and half of its garbage.

Taken together, the East German concessions promise a degree of normalization of relations with West Berlin that few would have predicted earlier this year. They also may open the door to more rapid progress in West German negotiations over remaining Berlin issues with the Soviet Union, which has been responsive to East Germany's hard-line views.

Chancellor Schmidt has insisted that major pending West German trade and technology deals with the Soviet Union, as well as cultural, scientific and technical exchanges, must provide for the participation of West Berlin individuals, companies and other institutions. Such participation will be feasible only if Bonn's consulates are permitted to represent West Berlin courts, other institutions and companies in Communist Access to West Berlin from West Germany countries, an issue that reportedly has now been resolved in principle

The further progress in Barlin, long the cold war's most dangerous flashpoint, sugtraffic and to open new stations for border gests the importance the Soviet Union and East Germany attach to continuing détente as an avenue to Western trade, technology and credits. It also demonstrates again that détente need not be a one-way street, of benefit only to the East, if Western negotiators insist firmly on a fair quid pro quo.

Dialogue in Southern Africa

The chances that existing policies of confrontation in southern Africa could be replaced by a process of peaceful evolution have improved. Settled conditions in the region could bring material advantages to the black African countries there. Admittedly, the history, economic structure and racial complexity of southern Africa make demands for immediate political equality in the union unrealistic, and no informed person is even advocating this. But the present system in South Airica, while understandable against the background of history, is in many ways no longer justifiable under modern conditions and it is in the urgent interests of both whites and blacks in the whole region that it should be modified. The fact that a dialogue at domestic level has set in even before that on the international plane is a promising sign.

-From the Neue Zuercher Zeitung (Zurich).

The compelling pressures on Rhodesia. apart from Mr. John Vorster, who wants to rid southern Africa of an open sore, are acute need for capital investment and a stable future, good enough to keep the white population settled. Other pressures are the coming independence of Mozambique, and the possibility that the United Nations might try a policy of economic strangulation on Rhodesia. In the past, cool defiance of world opinion, while relying on South African moral and economic protection, has sufficed over nine remarkable years. But nitimately wisdom lies in constitutional change, large enough to meet African aspirations, though furnished with safeguards that will prevent Rhodesia becoming another Mozambique or another Tanzania Against economic chaos, as well as against an African dictatorship, there will have to be bulwarks,

European Security

It is important for Western politicians to see that the long delays in Geneva have not been caused solely by the finicky exactitude of officials obsessed by disputes over the positions of commas. They have been caused partly because 35 nations are trying to agree on something they have never agreed on before, and partly because the Russians have correctly recognized the importance of the texts that will emerge and are prepared to fight hard for certain formulations. For instance, they have been trying to avoid a commitment to publishing the results of the conference in full. If they are successful they could make it difficult for their own citizens to claim their rights in matters such as the reunification of PARIS President Giscard d'Estaing likes to describe French foreign policy with the grandiose label of "globalism," meaning both a desire to be friends with everyone and also to join in safeguarding world resources plus protecting the ecological balance. Yet, in fact, he has quietly taken pains to steer France to a course of closer friendship with the United States. Somewhat to Giscard's surprise after a period of discord, this emphasis seems to have struck a popular note with French opinion.

A Fresh Tone

There is no doubt that Franco-American relationships were given a fresh tone by the Giscard-Ford meeting in Martinique, Gis-card has told friends he found Ford direct, pleasant, well informed (especially on military matters), and not in the least mistrustful, It was Ford, not Kissinger, who briefed the French on the Vladivostok summit with

Now that the United States and France have appreciably narrow-ed the gap between them on energy and monetary questions, Giscard doesn't see other major stambling blocks. Even on rivalry for military jet sales to NATO countries, there was mutual un-derstanding that, where pos-sible, the winner should help the loser on lesser contracts, although it was conceded no bilateral sales accord could be reached.

The French President also apnears convinced the Americans prefer direct talks with France over such talks with other Europeans, Perhaps he believes more relaxed. Britain, he seems persuaded is no longer a valid partner because it totally lacks self-confidence, and, although

West Germany has a privileged relationship, this is tinged with Such is a comforting conclusion, But two factors can always pre-sent difficulties: the great disparin power between the U.S.A. and this country, and also the slow pace of developing European unity.

On the first point Giscard, although he was never an outright Gaullist, has a theory very similar to the general's. He believes America doesn't recognize its own size and strength in comparison with other lands, and this produces a political application of Newton's law: A body does not know its own erst

And because there is such a tangle of private Franco-American relationships—business, financial technical cultural—they are far more complex than the simple Franco-Russian relationship of state to state since everything in the Soviet Union is done by the state alone.

The second complication for Giscard, is produced by the fact that the European Community is developing too slowly although it will, in the end, come together because this is a historical necessity. The trouble is that during the interim period Washington must understandably work on the basis of bilateral approaches to each member while the community itself prefers a multilateral approach. This complicates matters,

Against a more harmonious background, the French President apparently feels Paris and Washington should work in tandem to encourage a peaceful solution in the Middle East, But for him this can be achieved only when three elementary factors are ac-

Soviet Backwoodsmen

By Victor Zorza

WASHINGTON,-Moscow's release of a previously secret letter to Henry Kissinger about Jewish emigration has inevitably given rise to speculation that party Secretary Leonid Brezhney is under attack for the conces sions he has made to the United States. The letter denied that the Kremlin had given Kissinger any "assurances" about emigra-

The publication of the letter coincided with one of the rare sessions of the Central Committee which bring to Moscow the predominantly hard-line backwoodsmen who rule the provinces. When in Moscow, they are apt to vent their pent up resentment at the new-fangled ideas with which "the center" keeps flooding the provinces, and which the province party secretaries are supposed to implement regardless of their own problems.

They do not necessarily make speeches about it in the Central Committee, but they have their own ways of making their views known, by grumbling in the lobbles and by complaining to friendly officials. They were cartainly given much cause for com-plaint by the publication in October of the Kissinger-Jackson agreement, which made it seem that the Kremlin had promised to desist from barassing Soviet Jews and to let them emigrate. For local party officials, who bear the real burden, together with the police of keeping the populace under control, the agreement created very real problems.

They have been accused by Jews of using every possible means of harassment and persecution, including dismissal from work and arrest on trumped-up charges, to discourage emigration. They have denied all such accusations. Now the Kissinger-Jackson exchange of letters listed some of these tactics and, by citing the Sovietassurance that they would not be used in the future, it appeared to admit their use in the past. Yet the local officials had done no more than carry out orders from above.

Worst Fears

Now any intending emigrant could march into the office of a local bigwig—and some did—and demand his rights. The old fear that countless non-Jews-would also demand the right to emigrate would now come to haunt party officials with redoubled force. Had a breach been made in the concept of closed borders which protects the party's monopoly of power? They had often predicted the unravelling of the whole elaborate system of social and political control if the powers that be in the Kremlin relaxed their grip. Now, they would argue, their worst fears might begin to come true

A private arrangement between Brezhnev and Kissinger, im-plemented gradually and without too much fuss-which is what the Kremlin intended in the first place would not have stirred up an interesting and intellectual lies in high places in Moscow.

Bill was to give him public of HILLIEF documented "assurances" of a this emigration. Kissinger chose his words carefully to mean differen things to different people—as exercise in ambiguity in which h excels and to which he owe: " some of his most notable diplo : matic successes.

Sent Letter

Jackson could read Kissinger formula as conveying Moscow. emigration But in Moscow if could be read as conveying D. more than an "assurance," that the Soviet Union would strictly observe its emigration laws which it had always claimed to have done. When Brezhnev sav how the assurances were in terpreted in Washington, he could sense trouble coming. The U.S. Congress could insist that he should live up to his "assurances; and Soviet critics could take him to task for giving any assurances in the first place. To cover himself, he ordered Foreign Minister Gromyko to send Kissinger a letter, for the record, denying that any assurances had been given but this remained unpublished at the time.

So long as things are going well for Brezhnev in the Politburo, he can handle his backwoodsmen There was no press campaign against the "interference in Soviet internal affairs" implicit in the Kissinger-Jackson exchange (n emigration, although on earlieoccasions almost any mention of the subject would have produced a flood of complaints. Brezhnev was obviously keeping thing; under control. The Viadivoster, summit was played up by the Soviet press as a great success,

But it was not long before President Nikolai Podgorny, who has been much cooler about détente : than Brezhnev, introduced a discordant note. He implied that the Soviet-American bargaining which resulted in the Kissinger Jackson formula could derogata::: from the sovereignty of the Soviet Union. "The questions of a sovereignty and of our internalaffairs," he said, "have neverbeen and will never be a matter : for political bargaining"—by which he meant that they should not have been a matter for such bargaining. It would be "in-tolerably shortsighted," he insisted, not to take "full account" of foreign attempts to exert pressure on the Soviet Union of attempts to interfere in matters of "internal state policy." Was he saying that Brezhnev had failed to take "full" account of 13 gravity of the issue, and that the was "intolerably shortsighted"?

Brezhnev's publication of the letter to Kissinger, after a delay of nearly two months, constitutes his reply to anyone who might be accusing him of mishandline the emigration issue—whether the accusations come from Podgorny, or the Central Committee backwoodsmen, or both. The timing of the publication may suggest that it was intended to be taken: on the trade bill, as it certainly was, but its impact on Soviet

No other Vice-President has ever had such important and clearly defined duties, although several have been promised them. Richard Nixon probably exercised the greatest authority of any recent Vice-President; he performed some of President Eisenhower's duties during the President's two serious illnesses.

Eisenhower Queried

Yet, Nixon was by no means acting president (that was not constitutionally possible until the 25th Amendment was ratified). and in 1960, when Eisenhower was asked to give an example of a major idea of Nixon's that had been adopted by the administration, the President replied, "If you give me a week I might think of one. I don't remember."

That remark was made when Vice-President Nixon was running for the presidency against John Kennedy.

Neither Nixon nor any other vice-president of recent times has had the executive experience of Nelson Rockefeller. Rockefeller has been in government service for 34 years, 15 of them as governor of the rich, populous and complex state of New York

President Ford was able to select this accomplished public servant as Vice-President without regard to the usual political considerations that prevail in a national

Such considerations, notably a desire to win the South, led President Nixon, for example, to choose Gov. Spiro Agnew of Maryland. Agnew was a man of clearly limited experience and capacity and was under suspicion long before scandal finally drove him out of office. The 25th Amendment, ratified in 1967 and first used when Agnew resigned last year, made possible President Ford's uninhibited choice, as well as his own appointment as Vice-President by President Nixon.

The amendment provides that "whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the vice-president, the president shall nominate a vice-president who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both houses of Congress."

Scholars have criticized this procedure as undemogratic especially because it has led to the selection of two vice-presidents without benefit of elections in the last 14 months. Gerald Ford was nominated on Oct. 12, 1973, and confirmed Dec. 6, 1973; Nelson. Rockefeller was nominated on Aug. 20 and confirmed on Dec. 19,

Japan Issues Plan to Cut Energy Use

Voluntary Response Is Seen as Key

By Don Oberdorfer TOKYO, Dec. 25 (WP).—The Japanese government announced yesterday a new energy-conservation program designed to save foreign exchange and to contribute to a worldwide move by the consuming nations to reduce oil consumption.

The conservation program. scheduled to take effect on Jan. 1, was announced without much faniare by a middle-level government committee. Although if calls for quarterly reports by industry and government agencies, the program appears to rely primarily on voluntary action.

Newspaper and other media gave the program far less attention than was accorded similar conservation pleas at the outset of the oil crisis, a little more than a year ago, Yesterday's plan was less specific than the previous one in its restrictions and the public is less excited. The chances seem glim that the new plan will be notably effective

The program sets a target for reducing energy consumption by 13 per cent by government offices, 10 per cent by private citizens, and 10 per cent by non-productive operations of industry. The savings are to be realized by such measures as maximum room temperatures of "8 de rees Fahrenheit, extinguishing unnecessary lights, closing some elevators and a cut in automobile usage.

TV, Neon Signs Unlike last year's program, 3

specific restrictions on business or office hours, late-night television or neon-sign advertising No estimate of the potential savings by the new program were made public. Informed sources said the program was the basis of Japan's report last week to the International Energy Agency in Paris that a 3-per-cent of conservation target is planned CHT, Dec. 18). Such a saving we d result only if the new plan is fully effective for the entire calendar year of 1975... In a meeting two weeks ago. a cabinet-level committee headed by economic coordinator Takeo Fukuda estimated Japan's oil imports for fiscal 1975, which starts April 1, at about 290 million kiloliters. This compares with 288 million kiloliters imported by Japan in fiscal 1973 and is about 4 per cent more than the estimated importation level for this year. of 280 million kiloliters. Japan is almost completely dependent on imported oil and is one of the world's foremost petroleum importers. Its policy has a substantial impact on the worldwide energy situation. Japa. nese leaders would like to save on petroleum to conserve foreign exchange and possibly help bring prices down. But they also are worried about industrial production levels and leery cf any action which might be resented by the oil-producing countries.

Current Japanese official plans call for an increase of about 4 per cent in the gross national product in fiscal 1975. This would be : reduction by more than half from the high growth trends of the 1960s but a major turnaround from the minus growth of this

A Second 'Leap Forward'

Mao Is 81 Today, Leading New Campaign

By Charles R. Smith HONG KONG, Dec. 25 (UPI).-Mao Tse-tung, frail and slowly fading physically, will be 81 years

Mr. Mao still is politically active despite his advanced years. His health is sufficient to enable him receive foreign visitors for lengthy periods.
But his activities are more limited than ever. He is not as deeply involved in policy deci-sions and political details as he once was, according to analysis specializing in Chinese affairs.

Chine is probably in better shape today than at any time since the Communist party chair-man proclaimed the People's Republic 25 years ago. But it still is plagued by problems rooted in a fight for succession, in the aged leader's conviction that revolutionary struggle must be a continuing process, economic policles and other issues.

As he turns 81, Mr. Mao's mass political drive against two dead men appears to be winding down. But a new campaign is building. The new drive, under way in the provinces but still unmentioned by the Peking power center, is a new "leap forward."

ed for treason, Louis Riel has become a hero in Canada, where national heroes are few. The leader of a bloody Indian rebellion in the 1880s, Riel, who was of mixed blood, has traditionally been regarded by most Canadians as an outlaw, a madman or a scheming demagogue. But in recent years, as the subject c several books, two plays and an opera, he is being accorded a degree of recognition and respect that would have been unthinkable a decada ago. Some involved in the Riel revival believe one reason for it is the fact that his ethnic heri-poser and music critic Gerardo Rusconl, 52, died Monday. Mr. Rusconi's works included "Motage blended two minority groups that are now making increasing demands on Canadian society: the French Canadian and the of Martin Luther King" and "He is being seen these days as a victim of majority rule," Bowsfield said in an interview. Canadians are looking for heroes. In the past, it was always the Americans who had the heroes, but in the mood of today we want our own."

But with the emergence of Canadian-studies programs in the schools and universities, that trend is changing. As a writer reviewing three books about Riel in the Globe and Mail of Toronto said, the students of today "are not likely to miss out or Riel in school the way we did, in favor of Marco Polo in the Orient or Washington on the

He is treated sympathetically, however, in most of the recent writing about him, including a new version of "Riel," a stage biography, which is opening next month at the National Art Center in Ottawa, and "Louis Riel," an opera that the Canadian Opera Company in Toronto is planning to perform next ye in Washington.

The most vivid illustration of the turnaround in attitude is in Winnipeg, his birthplace, where memory was shunned for years by everyone except the small French-Canadian community. Now he is seen by many there as a symbol of western Canada's per nnial struggle with the Ottawa government,

One of the glossiest new apartment "suplexes in Winnipeg has been named Place Louis Riel, after the penniless and ragged A few blocks away, on the grounds of the provincial capitol, the Manitoba government, after officially ignoring him for decades, unveiled, in 1972, a 30-foot Riel Memorial The memorial, with a statue of him, has a quotation from the speech he delivered to the jury just before 'convicted him:

The Magellan expedition was the effective discoverer of the clove Islands, despite Marco Polo, despite Serrano (who had Recognizing their unique nature, the Emperor sent 150 pounds of the shipment, evidently a large

ing them in costly vessels of silver and gold. Constantine did not know where they came from and the merchants of Asia Minor who provided them presumably did not know either. The spices, if they came by sea, had probably been transshipped at a dozen ports between the Far East and Asia Minor, or if by land, had been sold and resold at as many markets, and each time loaded onto camels for transport farther west. By the time the end of the long voyage had been reached, no one knew where it had begun. For the West, the origin ed bold enough to do so.

of the clove would remain a mystery for another 1,500 years. In China

Another emperor was 500 years ahead of Constantine in making the acquaintance of the clove, and he knew where it came from —at least approximately. The Chinese had begun importing cloves at least by the second century BC, presumably from Java, which was not quite their starting point, but was a long step in the right direction. At the Han court, etiquette demand-ed that a person received by the emperor should hold a clove in his mouth to perfume his breath in the sublime presence. They kept the secret of where they had come from to themselves.

Cloves continued to reach Byzantium, out of the unknown, after that first delivery to Constantine, and indeed even after the collapse of the Roman Empire and the breakdown of the imperial system of communications which caused so many other exotic foods to disappear from the Mediterranean area. The last known reference to them dates from the second half of the 7th century, when a Byzantine physician cited it as a medicine. Then they disappear from liter-ature for five centuries, to emerge in the writings of St. Hildegard in the second half of the 12th. But they were present, if unaccounted for, before that; the Saracens had re-introduced cloves to Europe via Sicily, which they were then governing, and Italy. They may have entered France by this route, thanks to the Crusaders who reached the spice markets of the East early in the 12th century, for the word for clove (girofre then, girofle now) appeared in French in 1190, so we may assume that the spice itself arrived in France at about the same time. sade occurred in 1106. Cloves had become enough by 1228 so that the duty to be paid on them was included in the customs lists for that year at Marsellles and at Barcelona. They were a Venetian monopoly; the Venetian ships which ferried the Crusaders to the Holy Land, for a price, came back loaded with spices. There was room for cargo on the return trips, since, for obvious reasons, were never as many Crusaders to bring back as to take

Marco Polo

The first European to see cloves growing may have been Marco Polo. In 1229 he visited what he called the province of Kaindu and described it as "a great source of cloves, which grow on a little tree with leaves like laurel but slightly longer and narrower, and little white flowers like clovepinks." If Kaindu was, as is believed, Ning-yuen, in Szechwan, it was certainly not a source of cloves in the sense that they grew there, but it could have been a trading center for them (the cuisine of Szechwan is characterized to this day by high seasoning).

But if Marco Polo did not see clove trees there, he may have seen them elsewhere, for his description is accurate. He is believed to have visited Java and Sumatra, as well as some of the islands about them.

In 1511 a Portuguese navigator named Francisco Serrano, serving under Magellan at a time when Magellan was still in the good graces of his native land, reached Ternate, the first to be discovered of the exclusive club of five islands in the Molucca ar-chipelago which were the only places in the world where the clove then grew. The Portuguese dld their best to keep others from finding out about cloves, by disseminating reports that the waters of the Moluccas were not navigable, being strewn with deadly reefs and shoals. They even went to the length of pro-ducing false charts to discourage rival ships from venturing into those waters, or, if they did so all the same, to direct them towards shipwreck.
But they made a mistake in alienating a man who knew those seas. They disallowed a claim Masellan made for compensation because of a wound received in the campaign of 1511, the same which had led to the discovery of Ternate. Furious, Magellan renounced Portuguese nationality; as a result, the expedition which was to be the first in history to circumnavigate the globe sailed under the command of Magellan and the flag of Spain, Entering the waters of the Molnecas, Ma-

It was made a capital crime to smuggle seeds or plants from the Dutch islands. The Dutch also circulated false charts, to lure "towards homicidal reefs any navigator bold enough to brave their prohibition," wrote Pierre Polyre, the man who prov-

Yale's Walking Bibliography

By Israel Shenker

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Dec. 25 (NYT).—Literary critics can get away with murder, but they cannot get far away. Rene Wellek, emeritus professor at Yale, pursues them with unflagging ardor and acumen. He is, or at least he may be-one never knows how the critics will judge -supreme critic of the critics.

"It's absolutely appalling to be in company with that man," said Yale's Prof. William Wimsatt, "He's read a bundred times as much as anyone else. I don't know anybody who lives more a life of the mind and books."

Harvard's Harry Levin, whose own field is comparative literature, called Wellek's achievement "monumental" and the man himse'f "a kind of walking bibliography, but with a great

It is as though all the thousands in the Modern Language Association, which meets in New York beginning tomorrow, had huddled masters and manuscripts into this one-man New Haven band.

Prodigious Memory

"His memory is prodigious," said Levin. "If I send him an offprint of something I've written, when I next meet him he'll say, 'Very interesting, yes, but did you ever look in the proceedings of the Finnish Academy for 1889?."

In "A History of Modern Criticism, 1750-1950"

(Yale University Press)—four volumes, two more in the works— Wellek examines and judges critics of literature in America, Britain, Czechoslovakia, Germany, Italy, Russia and Spain. A critic of this critic of the critics asked in wonder: "Is this book possible?"
"I still think there is a difference between a correct and a mistaken interpretation, that some kind of standard is important in a work of art," said Wellek in an interview at his home here.

There is a difference between Tolstoy and Jacqueline Susann, between great art and trash." The way to decide what is art and what is not is to discuss books in detail, he suggested, noting: "I don't think one gets very far with generalities."

His Languages

Wellek speaks slowly and thinks carefully in all his many languages, his native Czech and German, his acquired Russian, Italian, Spanish and English. He is 71 years old and moves with deliberation, as though he would put no foot wrong or miss a single word from gardes avant and derrière.

His "History" is the encyclopedic successor to Saintsbury's "History of Criticism" (1900-1903), and it has been gathering esteem since the first volume emerged in 1955. In its preface, Wellek promised to avoid mere pronouncements of impressionistic taste, unsubstantiated, unargued By the end of the fourth volume he warned that "the work of literature is the central subject matter of a theory of literature and not the biography or psychology of the author, or the social background, or the affective response of the reader." "He has brought order to our ways of thinking about literature," said Prof. Thomas Greene, chairman of Yale's comparative literature department. "Here at Yale he was the founder of what was first a program and then a department of comparative literature, and at first he was it. We have something of a feeling here of the twilight of the gods."

"I haven't discovered that I'm retired." said the man who has been called "the indispens-shle Wellek." "A friend of mine was asked how he liked retirement. He said I like it, but I miss my vacations.' I think there's truth in that." He retired in 1972

'Towering Inferno'—Classy Cast

NEW YORK, Dec. 22 This is how critics for The and stage productions:

"The Towering Inferno," directed by John Guillermin, lasts

nearly three hours and is "this year's best end-of-the-world movie." The film is about a huge San Francisco skyscraper that, on the night of its dedication, becomes history's biggest roman candle-and what happens to the people in it. "It doesn't burn down, just up" says Vincent Canby, "and actors at the head of the cast live longest." The special effects are "smashing." better than those in Earthquake," and the film has "a really classy cast" with Richard Chamberlain, Paul Newman, Steve McQueen, Faye Dunaway, William Holden, Robert Vaughn, Jennifer Jones and O.J. Simpson. Fred Astaire also puts in an appearance as an old con artist. The script, by Sterling Silliphant, is somewhat banal, "but the visual spectacle

Black Thursday," a French film directed by Michel Mitrani, is based on the memoir, "The Gates of the Louvre," by Roger Boussinot, The story is a true one: A young French student has advance warning of raids about to be made on Parislan Jews. He frantically tries to persuade the Jews to hide and escape an enforced journey which will eventually lead to the Nazi death camps. Only one person will listen to him-a pretty young girl, played in the film by Christine Pascal. Vincent Canby says: "It's an agonizing film, both because of the complex emotions it evokes and because it so often slips into clumsily romantic movie attitudes that don't do justice to the subject." He adds, however, that Miss Pascal "is an exception. She is especially fine in the film's quietest, most terrifying scene, where she at last allows a friend to snip the stitches attaching the star of David to her coat. She suddenly is first rate."

Shephard says it's a "thoroughly charming eve-

"Of Mice and Men," John Steinbeck's play written in 1937, takes its dialogue from the novel of the same name. In this play Steinbeck's purpose is less overtly political than in "The Granes of Wrath," and, says Clive Barnes, his concern is to demonstrate the pure love and trust that can exist between two men." The play depends absolutely on the performances given by the actors cast as Lennie and George and here James Earl Jones and Kevin Conway "are both not only magnificent individually but even more magnificent together." Barnes concludes: "In the depth of these two portrayals the production possibly transcends the play itself, and in the final scene Jones and Conway strike a note of purity that is rarely to be encountered in any theater."

"Yentl-The Yeshiva Boy" is adapted by Leah Napolin and Isaac Bashevis Singer from the short story of the same name in one of Singer's collections of stories. The play is set in Poland ir. 1873 and tells how a little Polish-Jewish girl who wishes she were a boy successfully disguises herself and goes on to school. The subterfuge is so successful that she eventually marries the former flancée of one of her school friends. The ensuing complications are the burden of the tale. Clive Barnes thinks that "as a play it is altogether too an-ecdotal. The storyline wanders on and on like a river through a landscape, but the landscape happens to be worth looking at. This quaint narrative really does give something of the flavor of a Jewish community in Central Europe a century ago." The real strength of the play lies in the characters and their setting and the production is one of "class and gloss." The basic set is a sort of white box in which "the scenes slide in and out of one another with almost the smoothness of a cinematic dissolve." The cast has been "delightfully chosen" with Tovah Feldshuh "enchanting" as Yentl, Barnes concludes: "This is an unusual evening in the theater, that will prove of interest to those who have a taste for folk stories and a feel for the past."

Australia Shutting Its Doors To Immigrants; Jobs Scarce

By David Lamb

which once beckoned settlers to its shores with promises of surny days and unlimited opportunities, has begun restricting its migrant intake because of economic prob-lems, including a shortage of jobs. New regulations adopted in Canberrs with a minimum of public debate will make it more difficult for most would-be set-tlers to gain entry permits. They also represent a significant shift in the Labor government's origi-nal policy, in that they link the immigration program more with national economic needs than with social considerations

The government has suspended its oversess advertising campaigns to attract settlers, has required for the first time that citizens of other British Commonwealth countries obtain visas before entering Australia and has stepped up efforts to deport an estimated 50,000 persons in Australia without valid work permits. In addition, nominees for immigration to Australia will be accepted only if a family member. already lives here, or if they have a skill or profession in demand locally. Shortages exist here in the teaching and medical professions and in several trades, including the electrical, metal and toolmaking fields.

Not Much Chance

"Basically, what the new regulations mean," an immigration official said, "is that unless you're being sponsored by a close relative already here or unless we have a job for you in a particu-lar field, you don't have much chance of settling in Australia, at least as things now stand." The policy change comes in the face of the highest unemployment

SYDNEY, Dec. 25.—Australia rate—3.2 per cent—since the Det which once beckoned cettlers to pression and at a time when the pressed economy is unable to depressed economy is unable to absorb the 250,000 youths who will leave school this year. The tight job market is giving the all-volunteer Australian Army its biggest rush of recruits since conscription was enacted during the Vietnam war. Persons already approved for entry to Australia will not be affected by the changes. But the great majority of 250,000 personswanting to move here from various nations will be disap-pointed. The government has set this year's immigrant quota at 80,000, the lowest in 20 years, and only 10,000 places remain to be filled, although the fiscal year does not end until June 30. During the economic boom just four years ago, 185,000 migrants poured into Australia, and since World War II more than 3 million have come from 60 lands,

Detroit Workers Opt for Boredom

STOCKEOLM, Dec. 25 (NYT).—After working four weeks in a modern Swedish auto plant incorporating group assembly of engines, five of six American auto workers say they prefer the conventional production line as used in Detroit.

The group had been expected to find group sembly more challenging and gratifying than the monotonous work routines prevailing in the American car industry. However, only one worker had an unqualified positive reaction to the Swedish method. The others were willing to accept boredom and the freedom to lose themselves in their own thoughts wille working, rather than accept a work situation demanding. greater concentration and a faster pace,

The six workers were participants in an experiment conceived by the Ford Foundation and carried out in cooperation with Cornell University. The aim was to gain practical experience in the new forms of worker participation appli-ed at the engine plant of SAAB-Scania's Scania division in Sodertalle, just south of Stockholm. SAAB says it was the first automotive company to practice group assembly of engines instead of the conventional production line.

In group assembly, fitters work in teams of three, each assembling a complete engine, with the exception of work carried out at the assembly stage. Each team can determine how work should be divided and how fast the work should be done.

SAAB spokesmen said a group assembly worker could take up to 30 minutes to perform a particular series of tasks, while the maximum time for any operation on a conventional assembly line is 1.3 minutes.

The six workers, aged 20 to 53, included two women. Three are employed by Cadillac, one by Chevrolet, one by Piymouth and one by Ford. None holds any important union post. They were accompanied to Sweden by Prof. Arthur Weinberg of Cornell, who coordinated

Before leaving the United States all partici-pants underwent at Cornell a week's introduction to Swedish working conditions. On their arrival at Sodertalje they received an additional introductory week devoted to the company, its program and trade union activities on the local

The next three weeks were spent on the shop floor, the six forming two assembly groups on separate shifts. During that time impressions were coordinated by Prof. Weinberg on the basis of frequent informal discussions with the six

At a news corerence at the end of the visit all six workers said they were impressed by the cleanliness. lighting, safety precautions and general attractiveness of the SAAR plant. They also found the noise level there considerably below that back home.

Joseph Rodriguez, 36, who is employed by Ford, said that, while the American production of cars is much higher than the Swedish, the individual work pace in Sweden is faster. This is because the American car industry employs many more people, he said. He added that his work routine at home was more relaxed and did not require continuous concentration. "I would prefer our system," Mr. Rodriguez said, "unless I could work at our pace here. It's too fast here." William Cox, 33, of Plymouth, agreed about the faster pace at SAAB and added that, despite the greater job satisfaction afforded here, bore-dom could still be a factor in the long run.

U.S. fire and casualty insurance companies, which provide hundreds of kinds of financial protection to millions of Americans. are running into financial problems themselves, and concern is mounting over the stability of some of them. Neither underwriting nor in-

May Hit Record

This Fiscal Year

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25 (AP-

record high, the government said Monday, but projections show the current fiscal year could set a new record for financial fall-

At least 20,538 persons and businesses asked federal judges casualty companies.

"The action of the fourth-quarter stock market hasn't done much to reinforce the capital surplus position of some companies with heavy investments either," Mr. Drake added. To offset some of the problems, companies have been selling their stock holdings, dropping some lines of insurance and raising Fire and casualty companies typically sell two to four times much insurance as they hold in capital surplus, which is the fund from which claims are covered. Experience has shown the 4-to-1 ratio provides a comfortable operating margin.

But the rapid deterioration of the value of stock investments has thrown the ratio out of proportion this year. Some companies are said to have as much as eight to 10 times more insurance in force than they have surplus. Under such conditions a sudden onrush of claims could be a disaster. As a result of the delicate situstion of many companies, those with parent concerns, such as St. Paul Fire, have been getting big infusions of money in efforts to restore stability.

Shares Sold

St. Paul Fire, for instance, has sold more than $168 million of its common stock holdings this year, has received $20 million cash from its parent company and has been given ownership of the life and title subsidiaries of the St. Paul companies, thus adding on additional $60.8 million to the surplus. St. Paul Fire

& Marine's ratio is now 5-to-1. As another example, earlier this month International Telephone & Telegraph Co transferred $126 million in assets to its subsidiary, the Har ord insurance group, which before the infusion was running a 6-to-1

Calls Project Financial, Political Risk Senate Unit Hits Siberia Gas Plan

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25 (Reuters).-A congressional panel has raised serious new questions about whether it is worth the economic or political risks for the United States to help develop gas fields

The Sennie subcommittee on multinational corporations issued little-noticed report this week that criticized proposals to assist financing of natural gas fields in Siberia, where the ground can be frozen solld to a depth of

of U.S. government credits and guarantees," said subcommittee chairman Frank Church, D-Idaho. "The financial risk of these projects, therefore, ultimately falls on the American taxpayer, not on the companies which stand to profit from them," Sen. Church The critical report comes on the heels of new congressional direc-tives in the trade bill and U.S. Export-Import Bank legislation that limits new overall bank loans and guarantees to the Soviet Union to $300 million, with a $40-million ceiling on gas and oil exploration projects in the Soviet Union.

Political Risks

Sen. Church said that plans to invest money in the so-called North Star and Yakutsk natural gas projects contained political risks as well as economic prob-

"At a time when the United States is struggling to reduce its dangerous independence on Middle Eastern oil, these projects would create a new and equally risky dependence on the Soviet Union for up to 10 to 15 per cent of the East and West Coasts' estimated

Japan Auto Production Drops 5.1% in Year TOKYO, Dec. 25 (AP-DJ).— Japan's four-wheel automobile output, including mini cars with an engine capacity of 360 cubic centimeters or less, totaled 594,-510 units in November, down 5.1 per cent from a year earlier, the Japan Automobile Manufacturers' Association said yesterday. However, officials noted the $144 million this year, and All-state Insurance Co., which is owned by Sears Roebuck & Co., November output total was the second-biggest so far this year following October's 622,614 units.

The production total included 386,835 passenger cars, down 1.8 per cent from a year earlier; 204,217 trucks, down 10.6 per cent and 3,458 buses, down 7.5 per 1982 total natural gas needs,"

There have been negotiations between three U.S. companies -Tenneco, Texas Eastern Transmission Co and the engineering firm of Brown & Root Inc.—with the Soviet Union for an estimated $3-billion project to develop the known gas reserves in north central Siberia, called the North Star project. Initial Accord Following President Ford's trip "The projects are not commer-cially viable without $7 billion to Visdivostok, three other U.S. companies-El Paso Natural Gas Co., Occidental Petroleum Co., and

Bechtel Inc., the financial and engineering adviser to the group and the Soviet Union signed an agreement to go forward with the exploratory phase of plans to determine the extent of gas re-serves in east central Siberia, called the Yakutsk project. The Japanese initialled the agreement to show the tentative approval to proceed if the United States companies go forward.

The Export-Import Bank has received an application for a $49.5-million direct loan along with a request for the bank guaranteeing private loans of $49.5 million for financing the U.S. portion of the exploratory phase of the Yakutsk project.

The Senate subcommittee estimated that, if the exploratory phase proves there is sufficient gas reserves, the development stage would cost $5 billion.

In analyzing the projects, the subcommittee staff said, "Careful investigation and extensive hearings by the subcommittee on two projects now under discussion between U.S. companies and Soviet officials to produce liquefied natural gas in Siberia for export to the United States, raised serious questions about the economic feasibility and the political desir-ability of such ventures."

ITT Accepts Offer by U.S. After Threat of New Probe

By William D. Smith

NEW YORK, Dec. 25 (NYT) .-International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. has reversed its stand and offered in federal court in Hartford, Conn., to accept a Justice Department proposal for the divestiture of its remaining 52-per-cent interest in Avis Inc.

The action by the giant conglomerate Monday came less than a week after the government raised the possibility of undoing ITT's merger with Hart-ford Fire Insurance Co., the largest corporate merger in his-

In September, 1971, TTT signed a consent decree requiring it to divest itself within three years of either Hartford Fire or Avis, Levitt & Sons and Hamilton Life Insurance Co. Since 1971, ITT has divested itself of Hamilton and 48 per cent of Avis's stock through two public offerines. The Justice Department plan calls for IIT to sell Avis stock to III shareholders at a price to be fixed by a court-appointed trustee. In return for ITTs acceptance of the Justice Department proposal on Avis, government lawyers offered to drop or sidetrack their proposal of last week to reopen the question of III's acquisition of Hartford Fire. An Avis spokesman said it also found the Justice Department plan acceptable. However, federal judge Joseph Blumenthal declined to immediately accept the proposal agreed on by both ITT and the Justice Department and said he would take the whole matter under advisement. He indicated that he favored a thorough study of the proposal to reopen the Hartford

Fire acquisition. ITT says it has been unable to find a buyer with an offer it considered acceptable for either Avis or Levitt. The most recent offer for Avis came from UAL Inc., parent company of United Air Lines. This offer was termi-

Businessmen read the International Herald Tribune for real estate investment opportunities.

Because they know that serious estate agents and property developers who have something to say to investors will advertise in "International Real Estate", the weekly Friday marketplace for agents

His age was 16. His crime: to be "on the way to school at the wrong moment in history. He made a miraculous escape, despite feet infected by gangrene, and ended up in near-fam' -ridden north Germany.

Now, living in New York, Sandulescu writes, And in "Hun-ger's Rogues" he novelistically details survival in a brutal Soviet slave labor camp and postwar Europe's teeming Displaced Persons camps, where refugees survived or thrived according to their arumen in dealing on the black market.

The black market was "the real economy," says the author, "the reality of the times. Diseased as it was it was the life and pulse of Europe . . It had the terrible vitality of an animal struggling to stay alive."

A dry-eyed fatalism infuse bleak narration of two years as Stalin's guest, but there is a Balkan twinkle of relish as he describes the dreary DP camps, with their sly rabble, that recalls the gritty galety of Brecht's "Threspenny Opera."

The "rogues" threw rancous dance parties in the camp canteen, fueled by liquor from stolen sugar and attended by dislitusioned Germans seeking festivity and contacts on the black market. The strapping, young Romanian was soon toting up treasure in terms of cartons of cigarettes, cans of Spain, choco-late bars—the prime currency of the market and the camps. His escapades include endless variations in pirating the fabulous cornucopia of Allied PX rations and UN aid and pyramiding the booty and hungry mobs "that might literally tear him apart' for several kilos of sugar or meat. In fact, declares Sandulescu, the DPs ate far better than the defeated Germans. One mer :rable character, a Corsican bandit DP, ren an incredible bazaar in-

On the diagramed deal from the final, South brought home "impossible" contract, taking full advantage of some slight defensive errors. He was surprised to hear a one-spade opening bid on his right. He had an automatic pass, but had some-thing to think about when West's response of two diamonds war passed around to him. South balanced with two hearts, and again was surprised when West tried two spades. East would no doubt have reverted to diamonds, but North raised his partner in hearts. venturing a double, was right in thinking that three hearts could be beaten but the defense slipped. The opening lead was the spade queen, and East overtook with the king, which proved to be an error. He wanted to play trumps, and was not sure that his partner could safely lead them. West captured the heart king with the ace and returned 3 trump, which was won in the closed and with the queen. Next the spade ten was led from the closed hand, and a diamond was thrown from the dummy. This was an elegant deception, since it was now hard for the defense to appreciate that South planned to get rid of all dummy's clubs. An immediate chib discard might have alerted them to declarer's plan.

East won with the spade jack, and could have beaten the con-tract one trick if he had shifted to a club. However, intent on stopping ruffs, he played a third round of trumps. South won with the jack and gave up another spade trick, this time discarding a club from the dummy. When East took his ace South claimed nine tricks: he had three winning spades in his hand to take care of dummy's three club losers, so he made four trum' tricks, three spade tricks and the two minor-suit aces.

NL Reject Top Designated Hitter 2d Year in Row

NEW YORK, Dec. 25 (UPI) .-Hal McRae of the Kansas City Royals was the American League's leading designated hitter in 1974, the second year in a row a National League castoff has won the title.

McRae, who compiled a 305 average in 321 appearances as a dh, was traded by the Cincinnati Reds in 1972 because of his poor fielding. Tommie Davis, who was released by the Chicago Cubs in 1970 and picked up by the Oakland Athletics who traded him to Baltimore, led last year.

Davis this year led all designated hitters in appearances at the plate—623—while compiling a 239 average.

The Cleveland Indians had the best combined designated-hitter record with a 296 average, follow-ed by Baltimore, last year's champ, at 291.

The Indians' Oscar Gamble was in second place in the individual race with a 296 average while Davis and the New York Yankees' Ron Blomberg were third at 239. Tony Oliva of Minnesota was fifth

The league's designated hitters compiled a 256 average this season, two points below the league average and a point higher than last year's combined dh mark.

Stabler Makes Raiders the Favorite

By William N. Wallace

NEW YORK, Dec. 25 (NYT) .-"Oakland is the team to beat. They've got the best record and they have had the best all-around performances. They beat Miami which is still a damn good club any day." So said Joe Greene, the defensive tackle for the Pittsburgh Steelers, the team that will take on the Raiders in Oakland on Sunday with the American Football Conference championship at stake.

"You just know it's going to be a real tough, knock down, drag out kind of game," added Greene's trammate, Franco Harris.

Most authorities choose the Raiders to win and the matter largely comes down to this proposition: for the quarterback position, who would you prefer to have on your team, Ken Stabler or Terry Bradshaw? Even though Bradshaw was spectacular in Pittsburgh's decisive playoff victory over Buffalo on Sunday, not many would take him over Stabler, even more brilliant in Oakland's dramatic triumph over Miami on Saturday. "My best game in the pros," was what Bradshaw said of his performance. The big blond has never been consistent and it is not known if he can, under the strains of playoff conditions, put solid games together back to back. Stabler can. On the heels of his destruction of the Mismi defense, Stabler is being acclaimed the best quarterback in pro football. Further confirmation will come on Sunday when he must stand up to the best pass rush in the league, featuring Greene and L.C. Greenwood, Dwight White and Ernie Holmes.

The winning team will go on to the Super Bowl to play the National Conference champion, either Los Angeles or Minnesota. The Vikings have been to two prior Super Bowls, 1969 and 1974, and lost both; Oakland to one, 1967,

Lions Retain Forzano

DETROIT, Dec. 25 (UPI).-Rick Forzano, who took over the Detroit Lions head coaching job when Don McCafferty died last July, has signed a three-year contract. Forzano, 46, directed the club to a 7-7 season after the Lons lost their first four games, and lost, and Los Angeles and Pittsburgh to none.

To refresh the memory, the famous "ricochet game" came in the 1972 playoffs in Pittsburgh when Harris caught a pass that had bounced off the Raiders' Jack Tatum and ran for the touchdown that won the game, 13-7.

Last year, the Raiders wiped out the Steelers in a divisional playofí, 33-14, as Stabler completed 11 of 17 pass attempts in Oakland.

Earlier this season, the two played again in Pittsburgh and Oakland won, 17-0. Bradshaw roamed the sidelines that afternoon, charting the game on a clipboard, as Joe Gilliam was the quarterback of an impotent Steeler offense.

In Oakland, a few of the Raiders lingered around television sets to watch the Steelers belt the Bills. One was Dan Conners. the middle linebacker, "I have a lot more respect for Bradshaw," he said, "He's the whole key-a big, strong runner when his receivers are covered. It was his running as well as passing that dominated the game. We can't let nim get cutside."

Cooperation on Cancer Studies

By Jan Sjöby

BRUSSELS (IHT)—The Brussels-edited. London-published European Journal of Cancer provides monthly some 90-odd pages of extremely tough reading. Phrases and formulae are delivered in loftlest intalk; the elegantly slick publication is not recommended as casual bedside reading to a nononcologist.

The text is complicated, admitted editor Henri Tagnon, a former Harvard intructor and a former associate professor at Cornell "But then we are dealing with an extremely complicated subject."

So complicated indeed, he added, that no single nation can hope to cope with it efficiently. The only way out of the biological, biochemical and clinical maze is through real international cooperation and coordination of efforts

Dr. Tagnon, professor of chemotherapy and clinical oncology at the Institute Jules Bordet, the tumor center of the University of Brussels, was recently elected president of the European Organization for Research on Treatment of Cancer, a closely knit organization of some 800 cancer researchers, from both the clinical and laboratory fields.

"It is not that Europe suffers from any shortage of eminently qualified oncolo-gists," said Dr. Tagnon, "This continent has probably as many of them as the United States, but unlike the United States, we have no European federal agency to promote coordinated inter-European cancer research and fully utilize available information.

"The Americans carry out their work in a continental context, with the National Cancer Institute inspiring and correlating research in all the 50 states. Here, each small nation has its own national health agency, working only within its own national borders. Communication between scientists suffers, duplication of effort occurs, and valuable time and talent are wasted."

In 1962 some semblance of order was brought to the scrambled European cancer research scene. A group of tumor biologists from nine countries came together to form EORTC, to establish lines of communication, pool knowledge and plan future research. EORTC today, though not as complex as the subject with which it deals, is an intricate network. There are a number of clinical and pre-clinical cooperative groups, cooperative research groups and research information clubs dealing with specifics such as hematosarcoma, choriocarcinoma and melanoma. A screening program for anti-cancer agents is well under way. Symposia and courses are arranged from time to time. Several publications are issued periodically, among them the European Journal of Cancer, considered (by those who can read it) as one of the world's five leading platforms in its

Can a general practitioner understand the text? "I don't believe so," said Dr. Tagnon, "Even between oncologists it may be difficult reading. The papers published are running reports on research in very specific fields and a lung cancer man tends to use a different vocabulary from, say, that of a bone cancer man."

The professor and his associates must surely have made a lot of friends in the past 12 years. But, he indicated, they need a lot more friends. "Our operating budget is very limited," said Dr. Tagnon, "and we need money. We are operating now mainly on a great grant from the American National Cancer Institute but the Americans will surely expect us to stand on our own legs in another two or three years. That's why we are trying to form a group named Friends of the EORTC to raise money for us, from strictly European sources, I believe we are working on a significant proposition and dinate, at least as much as it would take to build a couple of miles of superhighway." Dr. Tagnon indicated that he and his associates from Denmark to France, from Italy to Great Britain—not to mention Belgium, the nerve center of the operationare most grateful for the current Amer-

"They are generous, the Americans," said the professor, but they are clever too. They realize, as ur governments don't seem to do, that cancer is a global problem and that it has to be attacked on a global level. The Americans profit from our pooled, computerized information, just as we gain from the steady flow of transatlantic intelligence, and the ultimate beneficiary is all mankind."

President of the friends organization is Jean Rey, the former head of the EEC commission and now president of the Committee for a United Europe. When does he expect the cancer problem to be beaten? "We beat it bit by bit, day by day," said Dr. Tagnon. "By an intelligent guess (with proper financial backing), we may all have to die of something else in 10 years or so."

Onassis also announced in paid newspaper advertisements that he would give 10 million drachmae ($333,000) to charity. In the announcement, Onessis said that his offer was prompted by "suggestions" from foreign and Greek technicians that the plane in which his son was killed might have been sabotaged prior to takeoff.
